Now in paperback format, this is the first work to examine data privacy laws across Asia, covering all 26 countries and separate jurisdictions, and with in-depth analysis of the 14 which have specialised data privacy laws. Professor Greenleaf demonstrates the increasing world-wide significance of data privacy and the international context of the development of national data privacy laws as well as assessing the laws, their powers and their enforcement against international standards.

The book also contains a web link to online updates for developments up to August 2019.

“Professor Greenleaf’s book is a remarkable work of privacy law and comparative law scholarship ... It will be a mandatory part of the bookshelf of anyone interested in the global aspects of data protection.” - Christopher Kuner, Editor-in-Chief, International Data Privacy Law

“This compendious but highly readable book is valuable not only for the sheer information provided about privacy regulation in Asia, but for its commentary on laws, practice, contexts, trajectories of change, and issues such as standardisation and relations with the rest of the world of privacy protection.” - Charles D. Raab, University of Edinburgh

“... The book is thus essential reading for anyone who wants to gain a thorough understanding of the nature of data privacy law as a global phenomenon ... it will stand as a truly classic study in its field for many years to come.” - Lee A. Bygrave, University of Oslo (Computer Law & Security Review)

“Graham Greenleaf has thought more and more deeply about data protection and privacy laws in Asia than most scholars or practitioners. This masterful volume offers detailed studies of the key jurisdictions as well as thoughtful - and thought-provoking - analysis of regional trends and possible futures.” - Professor Simon Chesterman, Dean of the National University of Singapore Faculty of Law

Graham Greenleaf is Professor of Law & Information Systems at the University of New South Wales, and Joint Editor, of the Oxford Data Protection & Privacy Law Series (OUP)
